

Questions & Answers on California's Stay at Home Order as of March 26, 2020

The City of Newport Beach will update this list of questions and answers as we receive new or clarified information that helps residents and businesses to better understand Governor Newsom's executive order requiring residents to stay at home.

About the Stay At Home Order

What did Governor Newsom sign?

Governor Newsom signed an Executive Order requiring all California residents to stay at home. Residents are permitted to access essential services such as health care, groceries, take-out food, laundromats, banking, pharmacies and gas stations. You can find more information on the State's Covid-19 response website.

Also, those that work in certain private sector jobs and in government are permitted to provide essential and critical services. More information is provided below.

Will the City of Newport Beach, County of Orange, or State of California enforce the Governor's Order?

No. Our understanding from the Governor's comments is that he expects Californians to do the right thing and follow the order. He also expects Californians to "self-regulate", noting its incumbent on all us to change our behaviors.

City staff, including Newport Beach Police Department personnel, will continue to encourage the public to follow the order through direct contacts and our website, social media posts, and signage.

Additional Signage in Other Areas

Additional signage has also been placed in our community's most popular recreation areas to remind users of the social distancing directive and the importance of maintaining at least six feet of separation from others.

Are the parking lots located by the beach open? (updated March 26)

On March 25, City-owned beachfront parking lots and its two piers were closed, in alignment with the most recent guidance from Gov. Gavin Newsom's office to limit public gatherings and reduce the spread of COVID-19. City beaches remain open. The State has closed of Crystal Cove State Beach's parking lot.

Why is the six-foot separation important?

According to the Centers for Disease Control website, the virus is thought to mainly spread between people who are in close contact (defined as within about six feet). It spreads through respiratory droplets produced when an infected person coughs or sneezes. The now airborne droplets can land in the mouths or noses or possibly be inhaled into the of those nearby.

What is the City doing about people who aren't following the six-foot-separation directive?

Our response is in line with what neighboring cities are doing and more importantly, it is in line with Governor Newsom's expectations. He has not called for enforcement of the social distancing directive. Rather, he is asking Californian's to self-regulate, use common sense and change our behaviors to conform with the Stay at Home order and social distancing directive.

To reinforce the importance of social distancing, the City is closely monitoring high-visibility and popular areas like the boardwalk and beaches and increased the presence of Newport Beach Police Department personnel. Officers are explaining the Governor's Executive Order and encouraging the public and businesses to follow it.

The City will be placing more signage in and around our community's most popular recreational spaces this week to reinforce the importance of social distancing and we're also increasing the messages we distribute through our website and social media channels.
